How to Make Slime

Slime is a soft, gooey, and slippery substance. Why do kids love it so much? Some say because it is satisfying. Moving it around makes them feel good. They can squish, poke, stretch and roll it. Others say because it is a good stress reliever. When they are feeling uptight, slime relaxes them and makes them feel better. Whatever the reason, it seems like this trend is here to stay. Are you a fan of slime? Would you like to know how to make it at home?

The first step is to gather all the ingredients. You will need:

- 4 oz. Elmer's Glue
- 1 and ½ teaspoons of baking soda
- 1 tablespoon of contact lens solution
- food coloring (optional)

Next, pour the glue into a disposable cup or bowl. Disposable means a cup or bowl that you can throw away. Then, add the baking soda and stir until everything is well-mixed.

The next part is optional. You can add the food coloring now, or you can just leave it the same color. If you choose to add food coloring, be careful. Only use a little bit. If you use too much, the slime will color your hands and other surfaces.

Finally, add the contact lens solution very slowly. Push and pull the mixture until it becomes thick and putty-like. Do not add too much contact solution. If you add too much, the slime will feel too wet. It also won't last very long.

That's it! Now you are ready to play with the slime. Make sure to keep it away from younger brothers and sisters. This recipe is not edible. That means you can't eat it!
