ence as to what their job is really like. Students in M.A.S.H. job shadowed many different people, such as radiologists, veterinarians, general surgeons, pharmacists, gynecologists, and more.

The M.A.S.H. program stands for Medical Applications in Science for Health. It is designed for students who are interested in going into the medical field during college. Students whose applications are chosen participate in activities such as job shadowing different people in the medical field according to their interests, becoming certified in CPR, touring UAMS hospital in Little Rock, Arkansas, participating in team-building activities, and overall making new friends while having fun and learning.

Students also attended seminars taught by medical students and nutritionists. Students participated in a medical terminology class, became certified in CPR, attended a class to learn the importance of not texting and driving, and viewed a presentation that informed students on the importance of organ donation. Students also participated in mock trials with EMT students at Arkansas Northeastern College and learned the steps that they would take when in a real emergency.

M.A.S.H. gives students the opportunity the job shadow people in certain medical fields and get a first-hand experiment and tour the hospital and get a first-hand experience of what working in a hospital is really like. Students were rewarded with a day in Forest City, Arkansas at the Adventure Training Center, where they learned the importance of teamwork while participating in team-building exercises.

Senior Kayla Burks commented, "My favorite profession that I job shadowed was the surgeon and anesthesiologist because I was able to obtain knowledge about what surgeons do and what it takes to become one. I also learned the importance of having a reliable anesthesiologist. Without the anesthesiologist, the surgeon would not have been able to do his job with ease. Many would assume that the job of an anesthesiologist is easy, but being in the operating room causes you to realize that every move the surgeon makes can quickly change the status of the patient. Moving the patient's position can drop or cause their heart rate to rise drastically, and that is where the anesthesiologist comes in to stabilize the patient."

a lot of new friends and gave me better insight on how our government really works."

Senior Shelby Crosskno commented, "I learned that there are a lot of things involving politics that I knew nothing about. It was nice to learn more about our country and how the process of electing officials works. It was a great experience and I am thankful that I was able to make new friends through it."

one thing about his job that most people don't know is that "I really care about the kids; when they hurt, I hurt. When they succeed, I feel like I succeed."

Some advice that he would give students to succeed in school is, "Respect your teachers, family, and yourself, and always do the best at everything that is asked of you."

If given the chance to change professions, Coach Barbaree said he would stick with education. "Every person at times feels like they could have done something different, but when it comes down to it I love working with young men and teaching them the great game of football."

Coach Barbaree says he is extremely happy to be a Gosnell Pirate and looks forward to being here for a long time. His favorite thing about his job is, "I love the game of football. I love how it teaches teamwork and accountability. It is so rewarding watching young men grow into productive adults."
